Adventures of Tad;
—OR THE—
HAPS AND MISAPS OF A LOST SACHEL.
A Story for Young and Old.

BY FRANK H. CONVERSE,
AUTHOR OF "PEPPER ADAMS," "BLOWN OUT TO SEA," "PAUL GRAYTON," ETC.
[Copyrighted, 1886, by J. L. Lott and Co., and published by Special Arrangement.]

CHAPTER I.—CONTINUED.
"Must be something valuable in there, else it wouldn't be tied up so close; and, if that's so, the owner 'd advertise it. Anyways, I'll hang on to it till I find out," was Tad's final decision. He would no more have thought of forcing the lock to satisfy curiosity than of breaking open a money-draw.

A general stir among the passengers, together with certain fragments of conversation which reached Tad's ear, warned him that the end of his journey was at hand. Mrs. John Mason was among those who began getting in readiness for departure. As, detaching the cloak from the hook, she withdrew its rich folds from behind her chair, Tad lightly touched the soft fur of the lining by way of a mute farewell; after doing which he began making his own preparations for leaving. That he had been looking at the handkerchief which he had found in his jacket pocket, and which he had been fingers through his top of curly hair and pulled a shabby cloth cap well over his forehead. Then, with a fast-beating heart, Tad awaited the finale.

CHAPTER II.
The end was not long in coming. As the city clocks announced the hour of eight a. m. the train slowly rumbled into the depot, at the foot of Summit street, and came to a full stop with the customary jolt which bumps together the passengers who stand expectant in the aisle.

Then followed the usual rush for the doors, during which Tad crept from his hiding-place unnoticed in the general confusion. Carrying the sachel in his hand, he boldly eluded his way through the crowd, and, with a great sigh of relief, found himself standing on the platform unquestioned. As he was on the point of turning away Tad suddenly observed a young man whom he remembered having seen at the Broad Street station on the previous evening. A small bluish scar above his right eyebrow had first attracted Tad's attention; while the person in question was standing by the stove, quite near his own seat. At the time, Tad had wondered whether the man might not have been a soldier, like his own father, and, perhaps, been wounded by a bullet in the same battle.

"Yes, sir," thought Tad, closely examining the stranger, who, in turn, was sharply scrutinizing those who were leaving the cars, as though watching for some fellow-passenger. "That's the same identical chap, and, what's more," he added, "with growing interest, 'I believe he's the very fellow who hollered 'There he is!' when I popped out from under the cars. I remember him by his gold-mounted teeth, too!"

For this young man, who wore a cloak of chronic smile, as though pleased with his own thoughts, made a frequent display of some artistic dentist's handiwork. But the current of Tad's thoughts took a suddenly unexpected turn.

"Sure enough," he muttered, audibly answering to his own suggestion, "it's the likeliest thing in the world; why didn't I think of it before?"

Acting upon a hasty impulse, Tad approached the object of his conjecture, and touched his elbow. "Say, mister," he eagerly asked, as the young man sneered disdainfully, "have you had nothing of a tall party in an ulster coat down to his heels, carrying a blanket done up in a shawl-strap, anywhere's about this train, have you?" A curious look of interest—Tad had almost Tad crept from his hiding-place, saw exultation—flashed across the stranger's face as his sharp gray eyes, which were set curiously near together, seemed to take in Tad, his shabby clothes and the small sachel, at one comprehensive glance.

"What do you want to know that for?" was the response, given in a pleasant voice.

To Boston in, and you," patting Tad pleasantly on the shoulder, "are the honest boy that I saw pick it up and run after the owner to return it to him. But how happens it that you have not found Mr. Richards—my friend's name—you must have come on with us, and so?"

Here Mr. Jones stopped abruptly, and began staring very hard at the few remaining passengers who were running the gauntlet of a throng of penned-up hackmen, vociferating in different keys.

"Why, confound it!" he exclaimed, "here I've been standing talking, and let Richards march off up-town with his head so full of business that he's forgotten I'm anywhere in existence!
But it's all right—he went on, thrusting his hand into an inside pocket as he spoke—"for when Richards telegraphed back from Jersey City to the Broad Street station, he offered ten dollars for the return of the papers.
So, if I give you the money and take the bag, it'll be just the same, besides saving you a long walk up-town, eh?"

But Tad cheerfully replied that he didn't mind the walk, particularly as he wanted to see what the town was like. "Boston's quite a little place, after all," he patronizingly remarked, "with a place at the head of the town, somebody'll be offering a reward for this bit of property before long."

Which reasoning resulted in Tad's investing half his stock of ready cash in the purchase of three daily papers, in whose columns he hoped to find possible mention made of the lost sachel.

"I see that you've cut your eye-teeth, my boy," he said, with an approving smile, "and it's always well to be on one's guard, while there is so much dishonesty in the world. On the whole," continued Mr. Jones, after an instant's reflection, "your plan is best, so suppose we have breakfast together at a restaurant first of all, and then I'll take you up to the office where Richards is."

"All right," returned Tad, briefly, with more particular reference to the certainties of something to eat, whatever other uncertainties might be in store for him. And, secretly, Tad felt quite able to take care of himself, even though every thing was as all right as he had, and particularly well-defined reasons for doubting.

As they walked along together through the busy thoroughfares Mr.
Jones chatted agreeably of the men and things encountered on the way. He hoped Tad would not get cold though the children change climate so rapidly, and easterly wind swept sharply round the corners of the irregular streets, and he even offered to carry the sachel for him, so that Tad might keep his hands warm by putting them in his pockets. But Tad replied: Oh, no—he didn't mind the cold, he had plenty of pockets, as well as other fellows could that went round the "Hub."

Mr. Jones, with his perpetual smile, said something about a "capital pun," and led the way into a large eating-house, where, at the lunch-counter, Tad speedily began discussing a breakfast which was proposed to his appetite—thanks to Mr. Jones, who himself seemed to do ample justice to the coffee, cakes, breakfast and fried potatoes which he had ordered for both.
But, hungry though he was, Tad did not forget to occasionally glance from the corner of his eye at the list of names on the counter, near his plate. He had fully decided not to let it go out of his keeping for one moment, until it was returned to the proper owner.

Curiously enough, Mr. Jones, who sat next him, occasionally glanced in the same direction from the corner of his eye. Though, after all, this was not so surprising on the part of the partner of Richards, the absent-minded He was probably thinking of the law-papers contained in the sachel.

All at once, Tad, with his mouth full of buttered roll, looked up, uttered an exclamation, and, slipping from his seat, hurried toward the door, through which Mr. Jones—who had been thrown down his checks, together with a silver dollar, as he went by the cashier's desk—was passing. His head was bent as if in deep thought, and in his hand was the alligator-skin sachel.

CHAPTER III.
Tad, who was stout-hearted and swift-footed, rather unexpectedly confronted Mr. Jones on the pavement in front of the restaurant, just as he was hailing a bus. "I say," cried Tad, excitedly, "none of that, you know—give me back my sachel!"

Mr. Jones, startled, stared very hard at Tad, as though he were trying to remember where he had seen him before, and then looked at the sachel in his hand. "Well, I declare!" he exclaimed, in seeming surprise, "I must have taken this up in a fit of abstraction and walked out, without thinking of you at all, my lad."

briefly, to Mr. Jones, who complied so promptly as greedily to astonish Tad, and then, obedient to a gesture from him of the case, the fraudulent Jones vanished with considerable celerity round the nearest corner, while the small man walked quietly away.

"That's City-Detective Blossom—he's been in our place lots of times," Tad heard a telegraph messenger-boy inform another, "in awe-struck Jones, and, after admiringly watching the small man out of sight, the two scampered off together."

"Strikes me that my friend Jones won't get hold of this same little bag as easy as he thought for," chuckled Tad, unconscious that the gentleman in question, with his hat pulled down over his forehead like the villain in a play, was watching his movements from a neighboring doorway.

But whether should Tad turn his footsteps? Up-town or down-town, or stop a minute? The sachel must contain something of more than ordinary value, of fact, which the fraudulent Jones had in some way discovered, else why was he so anxious to get possession of it?

"Chaps like him don't take the chances on an empty bag," soliloquized Tad, with a wise shake of the head, "and, according to my way of thinking, somebody'll be offering a reward for

investing half his stock of ready cash

sible mention made of the lost sachel.

THE SULTAN'S APOLOGY.

War Between the United States and the Turks Happily Averted.

Prof. Mortimer E. Cooley, who holds the chair of mechanical engineering at Ann Arbor University, used to be Lieutenant Cooley of the United States navy, and, although he holds a grave and honored position as a member of the learned faculty of that institution and is quite an enthusiast in his present work, he still looks back with longing at the jolly times he used to have on board the good ship Quinebang.

"During that cruise to Europe on the Quinebang," said the professor in the course of a chat a few days ago, "we anchored for awhile off Constantinople opposite the Sultan's palace. The officers at the palace somehow got the impression that we were trying to flirt with the women of the harem—one on shipboard knew any thing about the harem, but that made no difference.
Anyhow, to oblige the officials we moved down the river. One day two of our boys—one of them a hot-blooded Kentuckian—were out on a little pleasant trip, and were being pulled down the river in one of those Turkish boats by a native. One of the boys sold his fingers somehow, and dipped them in the water and then dried them with his handkerchief, the boat being at the moment directly opposite the harem.

A soldier on duty at the palace saw the incident and thought, or pretended to think, that the young fellow was trying a handkerchief flirtation. He hailed the boatman and commanded him to pull into land. The boys strongly objected, but the soldier waved his yataghan and the boatman, who seemed much frightened, told the boat to shore.

The soldier could speak no English and the young men could speak no Turkish, but it was evident the two were to be made acquainted. Notwithstanding their protests and resistance they were locked up in the palace guard-room and held in custody several hours. Then they were brought out and brought before a magistrate. The soldier told his story. The young men tried to explain in English, and in French and in German, but neither the magistrate nor any one else in the court could understand. The Kentuckian was hot and showed it. Just as the magistrate was about to pass sentence—and a severe sentence it would have been—gentlemanly chance to come into court who was able to act as interpreter.

The young man explained that they were officers on the United States navy, and knew nothing about the Sultan's harem, and would not touch one of his women with a forty-foot pole, anyhow.
The boys were discharged with a sentence of pain, but, it is greatly to be regretted that, as soon as he got on board he told the story to the Captain, a hot-headed German; he got mad, too. He swore black and blue, and by all that was high and holy, that if ample reparation and apology were not forthcoming he would shell the palace. I might mention that the Quinebang was a little sloop with a few old guns; and the whole Turkish navy, including a British man-of-war, the Turks had just bought, was then lying in the harbor. But, don't blame the United States flag had been insulted, and we would have to get satisfaction. The Captain went straightway to United States Minister Mason, and told the story, and he, too, got mad. Why, he was the master of the man of the three. He started for the palace, and pretty soon had a big complaint laid before the Sultan. The result of it all was that a few days later the Sultan and the Admiral of the Turkish navy came with all their guards and paraphernalia to visit the Quinebang, and apologize to the in-sulted officers. The young men were called up and the Admiral made a speech in Turkish. The Captain received the apology with graceful dignity, and thus peaceful relations between the Turkish nation and the Quinebang. The Sultan did the thing handsomely by sending us the next day a present of two brass cannon from his private arsenal."—Chicago

THIS GOOD OLD STAND-BY accomplishes for everybody exactly what is claimed for it. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in its universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine.
The Lumberman needs it in case of accident.
The Housewife needs it for general family use.
The Cavalier needs it for his horse and his men.
The Mechanic needs it always on his work bench.

The Miner needs it in case of emergency.
The Pioneer needs it—can't get along without it.
The Farmer needs it in his house, his stable, and his stock yard.
The Steamboat man or the Boatman needs it in every supply of necessities.

The Stock-grower needs it—it will save him thousands of dollars and a world of trouble.
The Flatiron man needs it and will need it as long as he lives in a round of accidents and dangers.
The Hackman needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, limb and comfort which surround the plowman.
The Merchant needs it about his store among his employees. Accidents will happen, and when these come the Mustang Liniment is wanted at once.
Keep a Bottle Always in the Stable for "Mother's Friend."

Not only shortens the time of labor and lessens the injury of pain, but, it greatly diminishes the danger to life of both mother and child and leaves the mother in a condition highly favorable to speedy recovery. It is the most reliable and most effective remedy for the most common and dangerous diseases of the female system.
From the nature of the case, it will of course be understood that we cannot publish certificates concerning this medicine, and we will leave the delicacy of the writers. We have hundreds of such testimonials on file.

DEATHS.

JOHNSON.—Miss Magnolia Johnson, daughter of Mr. R. B. Johnson, died of consumption Tuesday after a long illness. Her funeral was preached Wednesday at the family residence, by Rev. J. N. Prestidge, of the Baptist church, of which church she was a consistent member.
PRYOR.—Mr. Samuel E. Pryor died at his home in Owensboro, Ky., Monday, aged 52 years. He was a store-keeper in the revenue service. He leaves a wife and several children. Mr. R. G. Pryor, well-known here, being one of his sons. His remains were brought here for interment and Rev. J. W. Venable held the funeral services at the Episcopal church yesterday morning at 10:30 o'clock.
HENRY.—At her home in this city, at 10 o'clock Wednesday night, March 2nd, Mrs. Cornelia V. Henry, aged 86 years. She had been in very feeble health for several years, but her death was rather unexpected, as she appeared to be as well as usual until a short time before her death. Mrs. Henry was one of the oldest citizens of the county and leaves a large number of descendants here and elsewhere. She was a pious, consistent Christian and had for a great many years been a member of the Baptist church. Her funeral will be preached at the Baptist church at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Interment at the City Cemetery.

Ellison, who has visited Corleau Springs several seasons, making many friends who will be well wishers for her future happiness.

Every now and then we hear of a man who is opposed to turnpikes and some of the reasons given are not only amusing but ridiculous. A few kick against paying toll, and we heard of one man who was opposed to pikes because his horses would have to be kept short. But the opponents of public improvements are fortunately few. It is the inalienable right of an American citizen to kick and there is no law to prevent a man from constituting himself an eccentric and dissenting minority on any live and progressive issue like the building of railroads, turnpikes and other improved highways.

THE UNION TURNPIKE CO.

$50,000 of the $100,000 Stock Taken. Formal Incorporation and Organization.

List of Stockholders, Etc.

The subscribers to the turnpike scheme met at the Opera House Tuesday afternoon and effected an organization. Mr. J. D. Russell was made chairman and Judge J. L. Landers secretary of the meeting. Representatives of the two local papers were made assistant secretaries. The following propositions were submitted by Mr. E. P. Campbell, attorney for Mr. Jno. C. Latham:

To the Subscribers of the Christian County Union Turnpike Co.

Last week it occurred to me that with the aid of capital contributed outside of the county, a system of turnpikes, might be constructed that would prove a great benefit to all the people. Individually I consulted with some of the leading citizens of Hopkinsville, who readily approved the plan I suggested, and have assumed some contributions in this way the movement was set on foot. Messrs. J. D. Russell and Henry C. Gant, kindly offered their services to promote the enterprise and maintain through their efforts the large and generous subscription of nearly $40,000 has been subscribed to the turnpike company, by the city and county. This important matter having a tangible shape, I beg to make the following proposition:

1st. I will subscribe $50,000 to the preferred stock of the company, said stock to be preferred to the common stock at 6 per cent. and all net earnings of the company, above the amount, are to be divided pro rata between the preferred and common stockholders.

2nd. I will subscribe $50,000 to the preferred stock and if preference is made at 8 per cent. (which is about the ruling rate for money in this country) I will consent, that all the net earnings of the roads over and above that amount shall go to the common stockholders.

3rd. In the event that the foregoing propositions are not accepted, I will make an absolute gift of $5,000, receiving no stock therefor, provided the subscription already made, be applied to building turnpike roads in Christian county.

4th. Should propositions not be accepted I will subscribe $10,000 to the common stock of the company, provided that $80,000 exclusive of my subscription is secured, and the original idea of a thorough system of turnpike roads is carried out.

The foregoing propositions are submitted, based upon the idea that no legal opposition be encountered in the construction of the turnpike roads as proposed, by the court or otherwise.

Very respectfully,
JOHN C. LATHAM.

After some discussion and numerous questions by parties concerned, a vote was taken on the first and second propositions. There were 2281 votes cast, of which number 163 shares voted for the first, and 2118 shares for the second; the majority ruling, a unanimous vote was made accepting the first proposition.

The proposition to plan terms means that the first $50,000 of net earnings of the pikes are to go to Mr. Latham and all above that is to be divided pro rata. If $90,000 is to be divided Mr. Latham may or may not realize nothing on his investment.

The company will be known as the CHRISTIAN COUNTY UNION TURNPIKE ROAD COMPANY.

Articles of incorporation were read and adopted, and the following board of directors was elected to serve until the first Tuesday in March 1888: E. P. Campbell, J. D. Russell, H. Gant, M. C. Forbes, C. A. Thompson, W. G. Wheeler, P. J. Glass and Jno. C. Latham.

The directors met Tuesday night at the City Bank and organized by electing E. P. Campbell, President; Lucian Jones, Vice-President; J. E. McPherson, Treasurer; S. C. McVey, Secretary; J. L. Landers, Attorney.

The three banks in this city are to be equal depositories. Steps will be taken at once to put the work right through to completion. The County Court will be called together March 14 and as soon as they grant the right of way the work will be begun.

A General Restorative. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are emphatically a great restorative. The changes which they effect in the system are always agreeable, though rarely progressive, never abrupt and violent. On this account it is admirably adapted to persons of delicate constitution and weak nerves, to whom the powerful mineral drugs are positively injurious. That it initiates those processes which result in the re-establishment of healthy vigor is unquestionably shown in cases where it is taken to overcome that condition which is usually called biliousness and constipation. Through its action, regular evacuation and abundant secretion, are results which promptly and invariably restore the system to its normal state, the best protective against malaria, and a decided diuretic.
